

Ellen and Portia's Confidential Facts

Ellen and Portia run a lucrative alpaca ranch and have the financial means pay up to $1,500,000 for artificial insemination including the cost of the sperm, medical procedure and all legal costs. They are only willing to pay that much if they can get everything they want with respect to parental rights and virtually ensure they will get pregnant on the first try.

Ellen and Portia also adhere to an all-organic lifestyle and would prefer that any sperm donor only eat range-free meat for the duration of donation because they fear that synthetic growth hormones injected into livestock will create a defect in sperm. Organic food costs 25% more than non-organic food. In addition, the women are aware that the donor has been hooked on Mt. Dew and KFC (Kentucky Fried Chicken) since childhood. The women are concerned about his diet and want him to replace these with pomegranate juice and grilled free-range chicken. The women insist on the donor adapting an all-organic diet for at least 2 months and are willing to compensate the donor for the difference in the cost of food. As a last resort, the women are willing to split the cost of organic groceries.

They would also prefer that the donor remain celibate during the time of donation to avoid diluting sperm count in the donations. The women are concerned with the donor's playboy lifestyle because they are concerned about diseases. They are willing to pay him a maximum of $500,000 but only if he agrees to remain celibate until they are successfully impregnated regardless of how long it takes.

The women are sure they want Hasamat to be their man. They are fascinated by his looks and heritage, and are ready and willing to make this work. They want more than just three semen samples before insemination because of the likelihood of a low sperm count donation, and they are willing to pay to have this their way. The women are also willing to pay for these donations to continue up to one year, and if they do not get pregnant by then, the women want some type of reimbursement for all of the prior payments that produced no child.

The couple would prefer to sever all of Hasamat's legal rights and visitation rights to the child. They plan on using a licensed physician to perform the insemination to make sure Hasamat will have no parental rights and want an iron clad contract in writing regarding the same. The couple does find Hasamat's home country of Kerplakistani to be very interesting and are not entirely opposed to exposing the child to that culture.
